

Tinley Park Dedicates 4,000 Trees

Lions and Legions Sponsor Civic Beauty Program

The Lions Club and the American Legion Post, put on a joint Tree Dedication service at Tinley Park Sunday, dedicating the 4000 trees which have been planted as a part of the national tree planting program in honor of the 200th birthday anniversary of George Washington, the Father of our Country.

The members of the Lions Club, the Legion Post and members of the Tinley Park Junior Garden Club, met at the school house shortly after two o'clock, and formed into line of march headed by the Legion Color guard and marched down Oak Park avenue to the Tinley Park Garden Club park south of the Rock Island depot. Here a flag raising ceremony was conducted by the Legion Post members and the Boy Scouts.

Owing to the extreme cold weather the exercises which were to have been held at the park after two special trees were planted in a new plat to the east of the park, had to be held in the Saenger Hall.

A. O. Foskett, chairman of the Lions Club Tree Planting committee, was the chairman of the day.

Rev. A. Buddenhagen, of the Zion Lutheran church, Tinley Park, offered the invocation and gave a splendid address in which he stressed the use of trees and called special attention to the reference made in the Bible to trees.

Mayor Wm. Funk gave an address of welcome and touched on the work which has been done by the Tinley Park Garden Club in beautifying Tinley Park.

Mrs. Trudie Swisher recited the poem, Trees by Joyce Kilmer, which was very appropriate to the occasion.

Judge A. I. Zeller of Chicago Heights was the speaker of the day and gave a very graphic address on beautification of a community and how children should be taught that a tree is a living thing and should not be damaged or destroyed.

Lion President Fred Goebble made a few brief remarks regarding the tree planting project and how well the committee worked.

The tree planting last week automatically entered in the contest sponsored by the Lions Club in which prizes will be awarded the tree which has grown largest and healthiest by Sept. 15.

Members of the Tinley Park Garden Club will judge. Peony roots will be awarded to the winning adults and juniors entering the contest.

A. O. Foskett was chairman of the Lions club committee on the planting, which included Selby Hirsch and Wm. Funk. Associated with the committee were, Mrs. R. J. Hug, president of the Garden Club, Mrs. W. B. Ascher, secretary of Rose chapter of the Garden Club, Mrs. Florence Firehan, president of the Parent-Teacher association, Mrs. Gertrude Swisher of the Niagara Girls club, Mrs. Geo. Rowden, of the Junior Royal Neighbors, Mrs. Lulu Rogers of the Senior Royal Neighbors, Henry Wyman of the Methodist church, John C. Funk, of the Lutheran church, C. A. Wallin and Lester Stoltenberg of the American Legion, Homer Snodgrass, scoutmaster, Bert Fulton, president of the Tinley Park school board, C. Schmidt and Burley Anfield.

The Tinley Park Women's chorus under the splendid direction of Alexander Corrado, lead the singing of our national anthem and the Lions club also sang one of their songs. Miss Ruth Funk played the accompaniment.

The Chicago Sunday Tribune devoted nearly half a column to the tree dedication program last Sunday.

At the close of the program a representative of Swift & Co., told how the trees should be cared for.

The Lions club presented two trees, a Chinese elm and an American elm to the Tinley Park Garden Club, Mr. A. O. Foskett making the presentation speech and Mrs. R. J. Hug, president, accepting.

All in all it was a very wonderful affair.

After finishing their business, the old board adjourned and the outgoing officers gave up their seats to the new.

One of the first official acts of the new board was the re-engaging of Howard Schlutz of Joliet as village attorney and Kelker, DeLew of Chicago as the village engineers, this being the same firm which drafted the sewer plans.

Alderman Milton Krapp voted against re-engaging the same attorney and engineers, but the other 5 board members voted in favor.

New Frankfort Mayor To Open Local Ball Season

Frankfort will blow the lid off of the 1931 baseball season Sunday afternoon, May 3rd, with a loud bang. Beecher will furnish the opposition and according to advance reports, they have a very strong team. Frankfort however, has been practicing regularly for the past weeks under the direction of manager Henry Geuther, and promises to give the Beecherites a very warm reception.

Manager Geuther also announces that Mayor George "Barber" Haas has promised to pitch the first ball. "Barber" admits that he was quite some pitcher years back and often tells how he used to "wrap 'em around the opposing batter's neck". However that was many years ago, but this writer thinks that with the help of a lot of liniment he will be able to remove the kinks from his arm enough to throw the ball, at least halfway to the plate.

Sunday's game will be the first on the schedule of the mid-west Suburban League which is composed of Beecher, Homewood, Matteson, Monee, New Lenox and Frankfort.

The fact that the teams are made up of home town boys creates added interest, so this promises to be a big year for the league as all teams are well balanced.

The game will be played on Frankfort's new diamond which is located one block south of the new highway on the Conrad Heusner property. The boys have the diamond in wonderful shape which assures a fast game.

There are plenty of seats, so let's come out and back the team. The game starts at 2 o'clock standard time.

He suggested that a group of the Southwest Highway boosters get together and confer with senators Huebsch, Barr, and Meentz in regards to special legislation so that the project might be finished in time for the World's Fair in 1933.

Mokena Sewer Case Closed Wednesday; Now Await the Decision of Judge Ruel

The Mokena sanitary sewer question which has been claiming public attention for months and which was made an election campaign issue in the recent village election, will be a matter of history soon, as the bitter court fight waged against the proposed $70,000 sewer system ended Wednesday when the attorneys for both sides made their final arguments and the written briefs were turned over to Judge Henry F. Ruel of Kankakee county, who has been sitting on the case and the fate of the sewer now depends on what the verdict of the judge will be. His decision may be handed down within a week or ten days.

Commencing with last Wednesday testimony was heard from scores of witnesses against the sewer. The taking of evidence was continued on Friday and the final evidence was presented Wednesday of this week in an all day court session.

St. Mary's Catholic parish was represented by attorney Welnitz and Father Elmer who showed in his testimony that the parish would not be benefited by the sewer as far as the church property is concerned.

The main points brought out in the hearings was that the sewer would be a dry sewer in spots as there is no village water on some of the streets on which the sewer is to be laid. It was shown that in such instances the sewer would be worthless to the property owners along such streets.

That the McIntosh subdivision property is practically all farm land acreage and is used for farm purposes was shown. It was also brought out that there are no streets, sidewalks, lot stakes, water, gas nor lights in this subdivision and yet the property owners are assessed for the sewer as though all these improvements existed.

Another point brought out was that certain properties of the same size are unequally assessed, some being assessed more than others of the same size.

The objectors offered preponderance of evidence on this ground.

Attorney Howard Snapp, former congressman from this district, representing the Rock Island railroad, pointed out that the assessment on the railroad's property in Mokena was on land used for railroad tracks and the railroad would have no benefit from the sewer.

The Mokena Local Board of Improvements only put one witness on the stand. On the other hand the objectors had scores of witnesses on the stand.

Attorney Nadelhoffer, representing the objectors spoke for two hours in making his closing arguments Wednesday afternoon. Attorney Snapp for the Rock Island railroad spoke for an hour in his closing plea. He pointed out that the Mokena Local Board of Improvements had not applied for a permit from the Rock Island or the Interstate Commerce Commission for digging a tunnel under the tracks in order to carry the sewer to the south side of the village. Judge Ruel order Board of Improvements made his attorney to make a report on this point to him.

Attorney Hurley for the Local Board of Improvements made his closing arguments in twenty minutes.

According to a warning issued by H. F. Ferguson, chief sanitary engineer of the state department of public health, a considerable surplus of milk in Illinois has led pasteurizing plants generally to refuse acceptance of all but better grades and this situation has pushed upon the market a significant volume of low grade raw milk which falls short of reasonable sanitary requirements. He states the use of this low grade product, even at very attractive prices, is accompanied with definite risks to health.

The bill, introduced by Representative Edwin B. Bederman, of Chicago, prohibits experiments or operations upon living dogs for any purpose other than healing or curing the ailments of a canine.

In an opinion relating to shot firers given Director John G. Millhouse of the state department of mines and minerals, Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom held that the law forbidding the explosion of more than three shots at one shooting time ahead of the last open cross cut applies to rooms as well as entries. The mine board was of the opinion that it did not apply to rooms, while the miners felt that it did.

Charles M. Thomson, of Chicago, was allowed to file a petition for a writ of mandamus and the Supreme court decided to pass on the constitutionality of the laws placing women on Illinois' juries. One of the most interesting of all enterprises for the public good is the Illinois Institute for Juvenile Research at Chicago. Dr. Paul L. Schroeder, Illinois state criminologist, is its director and he has an able staff of psychiatrists and physicians as well as an excellent managing force. In 1909 it originated as an adjunct to the Chicago Juvenile court, and at first its duties were confined to the examination of delinquent children for indications of feeble-mindedness. Now it has a broad and varied scope, having worked out its own plans and methods, because there was never before anything exactly like it. In 1917 it was taken over by the state of Illinois, as a part of the Welfare plan, to carry on the preventive phase to the state criminologist's work. Illinois is generally acknowledged as the pioneer and leader in this line of effort and is constantly called upon by other states for advice and assistance in setting up and carrying on similar organizations.

A letter of regret has been received by Gov. Louis L. Emmerson from Col. Charles A. Lindbergh stating he will not be able to accept the special invitation to attend the convention of the Illinois Association of Postmasters in Springfield May 21 to 23.

FASHION LACE-CONSCIOUS ON SUBJECT OF WEDDING GOWNS

A "LACE season" is this. The spring bride is especially reminded of this fact, in that when it comes to her wedding gown, she finds that Dame Fashion is in an extremely lace-conscious mood. So much so, that designers, according to recent Paris cables, are creating many of their most charming models almost entirely of lace.

Latest messages from the French capital speak of "chalk white" all-over lace posed over satin slips. In most instances thread alone is chosen varied now and then with

A chief attraction of some of the handsomest prints brought out this season is that their flower designs are strikingly realistic. That is, the motif plays up the natural flower both as to size and to beauty of coloring. In some instances so true to nature are the floral patternings they look as if they might be paintings drawn from the original.

For the matron what more lovely than a frock of one of these gorgeously bedowered prints? A charming picture of "a lady" madam presents as she pauses at the threshold of her duchess lace. A very smart Paris bride sets a new fashion in that her nuptial gown is made of sheer-as-a-cobweb white wool lace, with just enough of white georgette interwoven to relieve the sameness.

For the many brides who cherish the thought of the traditional white satin, fashion offers an alluring compromise in that some of the loveliest wedding gowns of the season are composed of the two—satin plus lace. In many instances almost the entire gown will be of the lace with perhaps satin for the bodice and the sleeves.

A decided innovation recently cited for the bride is the wedding gown with a lace overblouse the same styled with a peplum and posed over a gracefully flaring-at-the-hemline satin skirt. The veil, also of lace, adds lace upon lace in a very effective manner. Which all goes to show that lace is playing home ready to greet her guests, wearing, as the illustration portrays, a costume of beautifully bedowered hemberg chiffon crepe, the superb coloring of which makes it outstanding.

Enhance Her Charms.

The life-size roses which pattern this exquisitely sheer hemberg crepe are done in soft rose, french gray and white silhouetted against a black background. It is prints of this type which particularly enhance the charms of the comely matron.

A slenderizing style is this jacket ensemble, for a two-piece it is, posing a jacket over a sleeveless gown. Deep fine pleatings border the sleeves and the hemline of this jacket. Which reminds us—when in doubt, trim with manifold pleatings of self fabric, for the pleated vogue is stronger than ever.

A costume fashioned after the mana very important role in the realm of nuptial robes for the spring bride.

The charm of lace in combination with satin for the wedding gown is very happily portrayed in the illustration. In its quaint off-the-shoulder fitted bodice, its short puff-sleeves and its full skirt with deep flounces of lace, this model is reminiscent of modes which flourished in Civil war days. The girlish lace yoke which tops the bodice adds greatly to the charm of this gown.

ner of this "classy" model is as practical as it is beautiful, since later on in the evening by removing her jacket in less time than it takes to tell it madam transforms her chic afternoon ensemble into a most fetching gown suitable for the formal dinner hour.

Items of interest in regard to the newer prints cite the importance of gray as it combines with other colors, especially with black or white.

Lesson for May 3

JESUS IN THE HOME OF ZACCHAEUS

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:1-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—For the Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Makes a Bad Man Good.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Makes Zacchaeus Want to Do Right.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Beginning a New Life.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Repentance and Restitution.

I. Jesus Passing Through Jericho (v. 1).

Jericho is noted as a stronghold of the Canaanites which was miraculously delivered into the hands of Israel in response to their faith, Joshua 6, and also for the faith of Rahab which saved her from destruction with the city Heb. (11:31). Two notorious sinners, Rahab and Zacchaeus, were saved at Jericho.

II. Zacchaeus Seeking Jesus (vv. 2-4).

1. His object (v. 3).

He sought to see who Jesus was. He doubtless had heard of Jesus' kind treatment of publicans, so was prompted to see what kind of a man he was.

2. His difficulties (vv. 2, 3).

(1) His infamous business (v. 2).

He was a tax collector of the Roman government. The very fact that a Jew held such an office under the hated Romans would make him extremely unpopular. Then, since he was rich, it was evident that he had practiced extortion in collecting taxes. By virtue of his traitorous act in accepting such an office from the Romans and his extortion in collecting taxes, he was ostracized from society. Many men have a hard time in coming to Christ because of their unpopular business relations.

(2) His shortness of stature (v. 3).

He was too small to crowd his way through to Jesus, and being hated by the people, they had thrust him aside, no doubt, with taunts and jeers.

3. His persistence (v. 4).

He ran before the multitude and climbed up into a tree. What he lacked in stature he was determined should be made up by the height of the tree. Zacchaeus seems to have been of that temperament which knows no defeat. The obstacles placed before him he brushed aside; those he could not brush aside he climbed over, his heart set upon the goal.

III. Jesus Finding Zacchaeus (vv. 5, 6).

While Zacchaeus was trying to see Jesus, Jesus was looking for him. This is always the case, when desire is stirred up in a heart to see Jesus, Jesus is seeking that one. When Jesus saw him he commanded him to come down from the tree and declared his intention to go home with him. Jesus called him by name, but did not utter a word which would humiliate Zacchaeus. Jesus knew his heart's desire and dealt with him accordingly. All souls who earnestly seek Jesus shall be found of him. Zacchaeus quickly responded. He came down, and with joy received Jesus. He acted wisely in that he did not hesitate. A moment's indecision and waiting would have kept Zacchaeus from Jesus—from Jesus and salvation.

IV. Zacchaeus' Conversion (vv. 7-10).

His conversion was sudden and thorough. He was converted before he reached the ground.

1. What the crowd said (v. 7).

They said just what they say today when sinners come to Christ. They call to mind the man's former sins. They also reproached Christ saying that he had gone to be a guest with this notorious extortioner, the tax collector. That for which they reproached Jesus was his glory. His supreme mission was to save sinners (v. 10).

2. What Zacchaeus said (v. 8).

His conversion was thorough. It took hold upon his heart. His new life was begun with resolution and restitution. He dedicated half of his goods to the poor. The man who a little while ago was a grafter was now a generous giver. His conversion got hold of his pocketbook. His determination to make restitution wherein he had wrongly exacted taxes shows the genuineness of his conversion. While God forgets the past of the sinner when he comes to Christ, the sinner who is converted will seek to make right all wrongs, be they unkind words or unrighteous deeds. Sorrow for sin is not enough when restitution is possible.

3. What Jesus said (vv. 9, 10).

"Today is salvation come to thy house." The publican was now a child of God, a son of Abraham. Salvation is a present reality to those who receive Jesus Christ.

The Bible

Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet anchor of our liberties; write its precepts on your hearts and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this book we are indebted for the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future.—U. S. Grant.

Afflictions

Afflictions are not so much threatened as promised to the children of God.—John Mason.

POISON in Your bowels!

Poisons absorbed into the system from souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that, gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied constipation for over forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drugstore sell.

Deserved Monument

A monument to M. Charles Surruge, oldest allied veteran of the World war, has been dedicated in the village of Auxerre, France, over which Surruge once reigned as mayor. Although seventy-six when the war was declared, Surruge volunteered in 1914 and served throughout the war as a bridge and road engineer. He was a captain in the War in 1870.

The Mud of Midlothian

A local politician pops up with the remark "You can be certain prosperity has returned when you hear two persons in one day brag that they voted for Hoover in '28'."

"He brushed his teeth twice a day — with a nationally advertised toothpaste; the doctor examined him twice a year; he wore his rubbers when it rained; he slept with his windows open; he stuck to a diet with plenty of fresh vegetables; he relinquished his tonsils and traded in several worn-out glands; he golfed — but never more than 18 holes at a time; he got at least eight hours sleep every night; he never smoked, drank, or lost his temper; he did his daily dozen daily; he was all set to live to be a hundred. Wednesday. He is survived by eight."

"The funeral will be held next week specialists, four health institutes, six gymnasiums, and numerous manufacturers of health foods and anti-septics."

He asked Frank Allen to a People's Party victory celebration.

The Midlothian Messenger is always ahead of the parade — last week's issue was dated May 1st on the front page.

Although both parties deny that they voted all the names in the Bachlors Grove Cemetery, they did manage to keep John Vacca in town long enough to vote.

If it did nothing else the past election can go down in history as being the cause of John Greaves making a bet.

Getting him to bet is as hard as getting Jack Entrop to like the Mud or the Editor of The Messenger.

Or Chief Terry crazy about the Conservative Party publicity committee's literary style.

According to a story current on the Rock Island a man from New Lenox on election day, having been refused a vote in Mokena because of non-residence, came up to Tinley Park and voted twice.

That's on a par with the story about the man who despite the fact that he owned a choice lot in Evergreen Cemetery moved to Tinley Park.

"What? No mail. Not even a letter from McCourt?"

As persistent as who a week after election was still driving around with a Conservative sticker on his car.

After reading the letters about him in this paper, one wonders if village attorney Harper still calls The Messenger a Sunday School paper.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulgains are returning from a visit to the Tonteurs. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulgains in their isolated position. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tonteur, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tonteur home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tonteurs go to Quebec. Four years pass. War between Britain and France flares. Jeems returns from a hunt to find his home burned and his father and mother slain.

As softly as the light, without a sob or cry, Jeems knelt beside him. He spoke his father's name, yet knew that no answer would rise from the lifeless lips. He repeated it in an unexcitable way as his hands clutched at the silent form. The starlight left nothing unrevealed; his father dead, his white lips twisted, his hands clenched at his side, the top of his head naked and bleeding from the scalping knife. Jeems slumped down. He may have spoken again. He may have sobbed. But the thing like death that was creeping over him, its darkness and vastness, hid him from himself. He remained beside his father, as motionless and as still. Odd crouched near. After a little, an inch at a time, he crept to the dead man. He muzzled the hands that were growing cold. He licked Jeems' face where it had fallen against his father's shoulder. Then he was motionless again, his eyes seeking about him like balls of living flame. Death was in the air. He was breathing it. He was hearing it. At last, irresistibly impelled to answer the spirit of death, he sat back on his haunches and howled. It was not Odd's howl any more than it had been Jeems' voice speaking to his father a few moments before. It was a ghostly sound that seemed to quiet even the whispering of the leaves, an unearthly and shivering cry that sent echoes over the clearing, with grief for company.

It was this which brought Jeems out of the depths into which he had fallen. He raised his head and saw his father again, and swayed to his feet. He began seeking. Close by, near the pile of apples which she had helped him gather from under their trees on the slope, he found his mother. She, too, lay with her face to the sky. The little that was left of her unbound hair lay scattered on the earth. Her glorious beauty was gone. Starlight, caressing her gently, revealed to her boy the hideousness of her end. There, over her body, Jeems' heart broke. Odd guarded faithfully, listening to a grief that twisted at his brute soul. Then fell a greater silence. Through long hours the burning logs settled down into flattened masses of dying embers. The darkness came which precedes the day, and after that, dawn.

Jeems rose to face his blasted world. He was no longer a youth but a living thing aged by an eternity that had passed. It was Odd who led him in the quest for Hepsibah Adams. He sought like one half blind and yet sensed everything. He saw the trampled grass, the moss-stained earth at the spring, a hatchet lost in the night, and on the hatchet an English name. But he did not find his uncle.

In the same gray dawn, stirring with the wings of birds and the play of squirrels among the trees, he set out for Tonteur manor.

He carried the hatchet, clutching it as if the wood his fingers gripped held life which might escape him. Because of this hatchet there grew in him a slow and terrible thought that had the strength of a chain. The weapon, with its short hickory handle, its worn iron blade, its battered head, might have been flesh and blood capable of receiving pain or of giving up a secret, so tenacious was the hold of his hand about it. But he did not see the iron or wood. He saw only the name which told him that the English had come with their Indians, or had sent them, as his uncle had so often said they would. The English. Not the French. The English.

And he held the hatchet as if it were an English throat.

But he was not thinking that. The part of him conscious of the act was working unknown to the faculties which made him move and see. His thoughts were imprisoned within stone walls, and around these walls they beat and trampled themselves, always alike, telling him the same things, until their repetition became a droning in his brain. His mother was dead—back there. His father was dead. Indians with English hatchets had killed them, and he must carry the word to Tonteur.

Thought which had been wrecked and beaten until now possessed him with a flame behind it that began to burn fiercely but which seemed to give no heat or excitement to his flesh. Only his eyes changed, until they were those of a savage, flinty in their hardness and without depth in which one might read his emotions. His face was white and passionless, with lines caught and etched upon it as if in bloodless stone. He looked at the hatchet again, and Odd heard the gasp which came from his lips. The hatchet was a voice telling him things and gloating in the story it had to tell. It made him think more clearly and pressed on him an urge for caution. As he drew nearer to Tonteur manor, the instincts of self-preservation awoke in him. They did not make him leave the open trail or travel less swiftly, but his senses became keener, and unconsciously he began to prepare himself for the physical act of vengeance.

To reach Tonteur was the first obligation in the performance of this act. Tonteur still had a few men who had not gone with Dieskau, and as Jeems recalled the firing of guns, a picture painted itself before his eyes. The murderers of his father and mother had swung eastward from Forbidden valley, and the seigneur, warned by Hepsibah's fire, had met them with loaded muskets. He had faith in Ton-teur and did not question what had happened in the bottom lands. Before this no doubt had crossed his mind as to Hepsibah's fate. The English hatchets had caught him, somewhere, or he would have come during the long night when he and Odd had watched alone with death. But now a forlorn and scarcely living hope began to rise in his breast as he came to Tonteur's hill—an unreasoning thought that something might have driven his Uncle Hepsibah to the Richelieu, a hope that, after lighting his signal fire, he had hurried to the manor with the expectation of finding his people there. His father must have seen Hepsibah's warning across Forbidden valley, and had waited, disbelieving, while death traveled with the shades of night through the lowlands.

He might see Hepsibah, in a moment, coming over the hill. . . .

Hepsibah, and the baron, and men with guns. . . .

Even Odd seemed to be expecting this as they sped through the last oak open and climbed the chestnut ridge. Beyond were the thick edging of crimson sumac, a path breaking through it, and the knob of the hill where they had always paused to gaze over the wonderland which had been given by the king of France to the stalwart vassal Tonteur.

Jeems emerged at this point, and the spark which had grown in his breast was engulfed by sudden blackness.

There was no longer a Tonteur manor. There were no buildings but one. The great manor house, was gone. The loop-holed church was gone. The farmers' cottages beyond the meadows and fields were gone. All that remained was the stone gristmill, with the big wheel turning slowly at the top of it and making a whining sound that came to him faintly through the distance.

Jeems, looking down, saw in the drifting veil of smoke a shroud that covered death. For the first time he forgot his father and mother. He thought of some one he had known and loved a long time ago. Toinette.

As he had stood at the edge of the Big forest seeking for a figure that might have been his mother's, he now quested for one that might be Toinette's. But the same hope was not in his breast, nor the same fear. Certainty had taken their place. Toinette was dead, despoiled of her beauty and her life as his mother had been. A fury triumphed over him that was as possessive in its effect as the color which blazed about him in the crimson bush. It had been growing in him since the moment he knelt at his father's side; it had strained at the bounds of his grief when he found his mother; it had filled him with madness, still unformed in his brain, when he covered their faces in the early dawn. Now he knew why he gripped the English hatchet so tightly. He wanted to kill. His eyes turned from the smoke-filled valley of the Richelieu to the south where Champlain lay gleaming in the sun miles away, and the hand which held the hatchet trembled in its new-born yearning for the life blood of a people whom he hated from this day and hour.

He was vaguely conscious of the whine of the mill wheel as he went down into the valley. He did not feel fear or the necessity for concealing his movement, for death would not trouble itself to return to a desolation so complete. But the wheel, as he drew nearer, touched the stillness with a note which seemed to ride with strange insistence over the solitude, as if calling to some one. It became less a thing of iron and wood that was crying in its hunger for oil, and more a voice which demanded his attention. It seemed to him that suddenly he caught what it was saying: "The English beast—the little English beast"—repeating those words until they became a rhythm without a break in their monotony except when a capful of wind set the wheel going faster. It was as if a thought in his brain had been stolen from him. And what it expressed was true. He was the English beast, coming as Madame Tonteur had predicted. Toinette had been right. Friends with white skins, who were of his blood, had sent their hatchet killers to prove it. And like a lone ghost he was left to see it all. The mill wheel knew and, even in moments of quiet, seemed to possess the power to tell him so.

With stubborn fortitude he faced the gehenna through which he knew he must pass before he could turn south to find his vengeance with Dieskau. Toinette belonged to him now as much as his mother, and it was for her he began to search.

In a ditch which had run almost under the eaves of the loop-holed church, he stumbled on a body. It had fallen among tall grass and weeds and had remained hidden there. It wore a Mohawk turban, and in one of its stiffened hands was another English hatchet like the one Jeems had. A scalp was at the warrior's belt, and for a moment Jeems turned sick. It was a young girl's scalp, days old.

As he advanced, he could see there had been an alarm and a little fighting. There was old Jean de Lauzon, the cure, doubled up like a jackknife, half dressed and with a battered old flintlock under him. He had fired the gun and was running for the fortress church when a bullet had caught him between his thin shoulder blades. Jeems stood over him long enough to make notes of these things. He saw several more dark blotches on the ground quite near to where the thick oaken door to the church had been. There were Juchereau and Louis Hebert, both well along in years, and not far from them were their wives. Raudot was a fifth. He had been a slow-witted lad, and now he looked like a clown who had died with a grin on his face. These people had lived nearest to the church. The others had been too far away to answer the alarm quickly, but the result had been the same. Some had come to meet their death. Others had waited for it.

Between this group and the smoldering pile that had been the manor, a lone figure lay on the ground. Jeems went to it slowly. The sprawled-out form was Tonteur. Unlike the others, the baron was fully dressed. He undoubtedly had been armed when he rushed forth from the house, but nothing was left in his hands but the clods of earth which he had seized in a final agony. A cry broke from Jeems. He had loved Tonteur. The seigneur had been the one connecting link between his older years and the dreams of his childhood, and it was because of him that he had never quite seemed to lose Toinette. He crossed the dead man's hands upon his breast and loosened the earth from his fingers. He could feel Toinette at his side, and for a brief interval the sickness in his head and body overcame him so that he could not see Tonteur at all. But he could hear Toinette sobbing.

Many Theories About National Flag Design

There are various theories regarding the origin of the design of our national flag, and most historians do not consider the Betsy Ross legend as trustworthy. It is true that Washington's family coat-of-arms contained both stars and stripes, but these had been used in other flags before 1776. The Grand Union flag, the first to float over the navy, consisted of 13 stripes, alternately red and white, with a union bearing the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, signifying the mother country. Some historians believe that the stripes were taken from the flag and the stars from the colonial banner of Rhode Island. Others maintain that the idea of the flag came from the Netherlands, as Franklin and Adams, who were sent to that country to borrow money for aid, told the Dutch that America had borrowed much from them, including the ideas represented in the flag. Another claim is that the stars were taken from the 13-starred constellation Lyra and signified "harmony."

Wise Farmer

A prosperous farmer, replying to a comment on the amount of money he was spending to put his son through college, said: "Yes, it does take a lot of money; but I'd rather leave my money in my boy than to him!"—Exchange.

The KITCHEN CABINET

To me it seems as if when God conceived the world, that was poetry: He formed it, and that was sculpture: He varied and colored it, and that was painting: And then, crowning all, He peopled it with living beings, and that was the grand divine, eternal drama.—Charlotte Cushman.

THE TASTY TORTE

For the cake par excellence, the torte is one of the daintiest. Our German cooks excel in this kind of a cake combination. They are rich with nuts, chopped or rolled fine, plenty of eggs and crumbs, with spices. The baking is another important point, as slow, careful baking is necessary for a light and tender torte.

Schaum Torte.—Beat three egg whites until stiff but not dry, add one cupful of sugar very lightly and gradually, not to lose the lightness, a pinch of salt, one-half teaspoonful of vinegar and one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Bake in two deep layer tins for one hour. Put together with whipped cream, or add nuts and chopped pineapple with the cream.

Walnut Torte.—Beat the yolks of six eggs with one cupful of sugar, add one-fourth pound of walnuts and six lady fingers grated, two tablespoonfuls of flour and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Add the juice and rind of a lemon and when all the ingredients are well mixed, add the stiffly beaten egg whites to which a pinch of salt has been added. Bake in layers in a moderate oven and use the following:

Filling.—To one beaten egg yolk add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, and three-fourths of a cupful of milk. Cook, stirring constantly until the mixture coats the spoon, add one and one-half cupfuls of grated walnut meats with a flavoring of almond and vanilla. Use between the layers and ice the top of the torte.

Date Torte.—Rub sixteen dates to a smooth paste with two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice. Beat two whole eggs, add seven yolks, add one and three-fourths cupfuls of sugar, beat well, add the dates, three tablespoonfuls of grated chocolate and one teaspoonful each of cinnamon, allspice, and a cupful of cracker crumbs. Stir well and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of seven eggs. Bake in a large spring form forty minutes.

Early Hospitals

The establishment of hospitals in the sense in which we understand them now probably occurred in Europe during the Middle ages. Historians differ somewhat on this, but it is generally agreed that the institutions conducted in Europe by various religious orders were perhaps the forerunners of the present-day hospitals. It should be remembered, however, that there were certain places set aside for the treatment of the sick in early Greece. These were more on the order of clinics rather than hospitals in the modern sense of the word. The first hospital in the United States was established a few years after the settlement of New York was made, about 1670.

Ancient Festival

Originally a kermess was a church festival, but later was an outdoor festival or fair held annually in the Low Countries of Europe and French Flanders. Either an indoor or outdoor fair on the order of the Flemish festival is sometimes given the name.

Desert Yields Secrets

to English Explorer

With dirigibles flying over the North pole, an airplane penetrating the South's ultima thule, tractors crossing the great Australian desert, American motor cars roaring over the wastes of Gobi and hunters bagging game in once-forbidden Thibet, it would seem that few places on the earth's surface remained to challenge the explorer. Yet, until now, the vast barren region of southern Arabia, known as Ruba el Khali, "the abode of emptiness," has defied the restless curiosity of man. The successor of a long line of travelers who sought to plumb Arabia Deserta's mysteries is Bertram Thomas, a young Englishman, who has just crossed the 900 miles of unknown desert from the Arabian sea to the Persian gulf, and emerges with weird tales of booming sands and an unexpected salt lake, of legendary buried cities and tribesmen who live solely on camel's milk.

Thomas has wiped out "the biggest blank space on the map," says a fellow explorer. And his achievement is the more remarkable for being accomplished without the new implements bestowed on the explorer by the Machine age. No airplane or dirigible or tractor car for Thomas—he was served by the camel, friend of explorers lured to wander over sandy wastes since the day of Marco Polo. His account of the unprecedented voyage aboard the "ship of the desert" is a thrilling tale.

Census taking in Portugal spells terror to the heart of the popular masses. In an effort to set at rest people who see in the census official the forbidding figure of the tax collector, a campaign has begun to reach the significance and value of the census. After sermons in churches, hand bills, posters and newspaper stories had failed to enlighten the public, authorities had thousands of bills thrown from airplanes.

General Pershing's Story of the A. E. F.

By Gen. John J. Pershing

The first section of the first division convoy had brought to St. Nazaire the headquarters, the Sixteenth Infantry, two battalions of the Twenty-eighth Infantry, one battalion of the Fifth Marines and some motor transport troops and stevedores. To see the naval vessels and transports flying the American flag in the harbor gave us all a thrill of pride. It was a pleasure to meet the naval commander, Rear Admiral Albert Gleaves, who was to have general charge of the convoy system.

The regiments of the division had all served under my command at one time or another. They were now, however, composed of a large percentage of recruits and would have to go through a long period of training. After a few days spent in the cantonment at St. Nazaire the Infantry of the division was sent to the training area of Gondrecourt, north of Neufchateau, and the artillery to Valdshon, near Belfort.

Arrival "Tipped Off."

Maj. Gen. William L. Sibert, who had won distinction as an engineer in the construction of the Panama canal, was in command of the first division.

The two Infantry brigades were commanded by Brig. Gens. R. L. Bullard and Omar Bundy, both of whom had many years of line service behind them. I had known all three of the general officers, as we were cadets together at the academy, although all belonged to classes ahead of mine.

It had been arranged that the regulations restricting reference to the allied armies by the press should apply to the American forces. But to my utter surprise the French and British papers, in their eagerness to let their people know that the elements of the American army had really reached France, carried full accounts of the arrival of this convoy, giving the port of debarkation, the designation of units and the number of men.

Tighten on Censorship. The publication of this piece of news was in open contravention of the censorship rules and called for immediate steps to prevent further infractions. My vigorous protest resulted in our placing in the French press bureau an American representative, to whom all matter regarding our army was to be submitted for approval.

There is no doubt, however, that the suppression of news prevented our people from obtaining a clear and contemporaneous conception of the great and often brilliant achievements of our armies and left such knowledge to be gleaned from meager accounts by participants or from the later writing of historians. It was unfortunate that such rules had to be enforced, as otherwise much that might have been published at the time may never be known, but there was nothing else to be done without serious risk.

CHAPTER VII

As the French authorities wished to honor our national holiday they requested that some of our troops parade in Paris July 4, 1917. We were not prepared to make much of a military impression, as our men were largely recruits. But to stimulate morale the French wanted to demonstrate that the Americans were actually coming, so a battalion of the Sixteenth Infantry was brought up from Saint Nazaire.

The untrained, awkward appearance of this unit, which was accepted as the cream of our regular army by the French officials, no doubt tended to confirm their belief that it would be some time before we should be able to organize an effective army.

If they could have foreseen the triumph of this same battalion at the peak of the great counter-offensive on the field of Soissons just one year later we might have been spared many delays and difficulties in carrying out our plans.

Troops Bring Joy to French.

Nevertheless, the first appearance of American combat troops in Paris brought joyful acclaim from the people. On the march the battalion was accompanied by a great crowd, many women forcing their way into the ranks and swinging along arm in arm with the men. With wreaths about their necks and flowers in their hats and on their rifles, the column had the appearance of a moving flower garden.

With only a semblance of military formation the animated throng pushed its way through avenues of people to the martial strains of the French band and the still more thrilling music of cheering voices. Many dropped on their knees in reverence as the column went by.

The battalion marched to the cemetery where the tomb of Lafayette is located. The ceremony there consisted of a few speeches, the principal speaker being Brand Whitlock, our ambassador to Belgium. I had been asked to deliver an address but had designated Col. C. E. Stanton of my staff, an old army friend and something of an orator, to speak in my place. However, I was prevailed upon to speak extemporaneously.

"Lafayette, We Are Here!"

It was on this occasion that utterance was given to an expression that could be born only of inspiration, one that will live long in history: "Lafayette, we are here!"

Many have attributed this striking utterance to me, and I have often wished it could have been mine. But I have no recollection of saying anything so splendid. I am sure those words were spoken by Colonel Stanton, and to him must go the credit for so happy and felicitous a phrase.

The parade of our troops through Paris doubtless fortified the morale of the people to a certain extent, but we all knew that eventually something very much more effective would have to be done.

The real question was whether the allies could hold out until we were ready. It was clear that no halfway measures on our part would answer and that allied hopes lay in American military assistance on a vast scale at the earliest moment.

Cables for 1,000,000 Men.

The allies thought an American force of 500,000 men the maximum that we could have in France in 1918, but in my opinion that would not be enough to meet the situation. If we could have had half a million fighting men in France in the early spring it would have been a different matter.

But looking ahead it was necessary to allow from 35 to 40 per cent for the services of supply, which would leave out of this number only approximately 300,000 fighting troops. Although this would aid, we could not be content merely to lend a helping hand but must prepare to strike a decisive blow.

While the appearance on the front of any American force was still months away, yet there was little doubt that if we could induce allied co-operation we should be able to give much greater assistance than they believed possible. Our study having confirmed the correctness of my tentative estimate tinguished from the purely military task, men with expert knowledge and broad experience in business, industry and transportation would be needed.

In the technical branches of the army there were many officers with theoretical training in special lines, but with some notable exceptions they generally lacked broad constructive or administrative experience. From the very start I determined to obtain the best talent available, and was fortunate in practically every field to find able men who were anxious to do their part.

The earliest application of the principle was in connection with timber and lumber procurement. The call for lumber would be enormous, and since it would be impossible with our limited tonnage to bring a great quantity across the Atlantic, most of it would have to be obtained in Europe.

A cable to the War department early in July, 1917, recommended the immediate organization of a forestry service, consisting of sawmill units, to be composed of experienced lumbermen and 8,000 to 10,000 unskilled laborers to build roads and transport lumber. Special request was made for the appointment of Prof. Henry Graves, chief of the United States forestry service, who was then on the ground, as the man to take charge of this service. A number of other specially qualified men were requested as we entered the task of building up the supply service, but as this was the first intimation given to the War department that such a force would be needed naturally it was some time before it was actually at work.

Heavy Work for the Staff.

During the first two months in France the work imposed upon the few staff officers who had accompanied me was very heavy. After urgent and readopted nothing which was really up to date.

The enormous proportion of both light and heavy guns used by both sides, the knowledge of our deficiency and the realization of the length of time that must elapse before we could manufacture and deliver them made it imperative that we seek other sources than our own to help equip our armies.

Following up an intimation it was learned definitely that, although not fully supplied themselves, the French could increase the output of their factories provided they could get steel from the United States. As it seemed probable that we should operate in proximity to their armies we adopted the French types for the usual calibers and sought their assistance in obtaining the guns needed, at least for the first two years. We secured an agreement that our troops as they came along would be provided with French guns and ammunition, including not only the 75s and 155s but 37 mm. guns and 58 mm. trench mortars as well.

It was most fortunate that we were able to get these guns from the French, as up to the end of the war no guns of American manufacture of the types used, except twenty-four 8-inch mortars and six 14-inch naval guns, were fired in battle.

Trench guns of the three-inch and six-inch mortar types, with ammunition, were purchased from the British, as they were considered superior to those used by the French.

Progress of Red Cross.

The Red Cross reported excellent progress at this time, especially in its first effort to assist the French as agreed upon with General Petain. Its organization by Maj. Grayson M. P. Murphy for war work with our own armies was now about completed. The made on the Baltic, I therefore cabled Washington, July 6, as follows:

"Plans should contemplate sending over at least 1,000,000 men by next May. . . . This estimate would give practically half million men for trenches. Inasmuch as question affects all allies whose common interests demand that we exert maximum military power consistent with transport problem, suggest early agreement and limit sea transportation to food and military supplies and the exclusion of every kind of luxury as well as other supplies in excess of immediate needs of countries dependent upon overseas supplies."

Question of Transportation.

The question was, therefore, one of sea transportation, but so far all efforts to get the allies, especially the British, to consider giving help to bring over men and supplies had been futile. They did not seem to realize that America would be practically negligible from a military standpoint unless they could provide some shipping. Nor did they seem to appreciate that time was a vital factor.

But the spirit of full co-operation among the allies did not then exist. They seemed to regard the transportation of an American army overseas as no concern of theirs. This apparent indifference also gave further color to the suspicion that perhaps after all an American army as such was not wanted. The situation from our standpoint was grave and embarrassing, for it looked as though it might not be necessary for us to save either the allies or ourselves.

An entry in my diary notes: "Two of the Roosevelt boys, Theodore, Jr., and Archie, reported. Unable to participate himself, their father's fine spirit is represented by his sons."

CHAPTER VIII

As the details of our mission abroad developed it soon became evident that in all that pertained to the maintenance and supply of our armies as dis-trained requests I was fortunate in having at my disposal later in the summer a small group of men which included some of the most brilliant and highly educated officers in the army.

In addition to those already with me, the officers included in the following cable I regarded as especially fitted for the duties for which they were desired:

"Request Robert C. Davis, adjutant general, be sent these headquarters earliest date. Request Frank Moorman or J. O. Mauborgne be sent these headquarters earliest date for duty as code expert. Request Samuel T. Hubbard, Jr., signal corps, now here, be called to active service and ordered to report to me. Request ten of following named officers be sent to report to me by second convoy for general staff duty: Frank R. McCoy, George Van Horn Moseley, Malin Craig, Alfred W. Bjornstadt, H. B. Fliske, Allen J. Grear, Paul B. Malone, Edgar T. Collins, Samuel R. Gleaves, Laurence Halstead, Nicholas W. Campanole, A. R. Moreno, Preston Brown, LeRoy R. Eltinge, W. B. Buritt, Frank T. Hines, Edward L. King, J. P. McAdams, W. C. Sweeney, J. B. Barnes, Kerr T. Riggs, W. H. Winters, Wait C. Johnson, Stuart Heintzelman, Upton Birnie, Kirby Walker, Berkeley Enoch. . . ."

Having this nucleus and selecting the best features of the French and British systems, a general staff organization was created, which efficiently met every demand made upon it throughout the war and which remains today as a model for present and future guidance.

Source of Guns a Problem.

The question of artillery procurement caused me much concern. The almost negligible amount on hand when we went to war consisted mostly of field guns of the three-inch type, then largely in the hands of troops in the Philippine Islands and elsewhere and unavailable for issue. Moreover, for calibers heavier than the three-inch type our ordnance department had

Freezing Pure Water

Pure water, in which there are no ice particles or germ crystals, freezes spontaneously at 32 degrees centigrade, instead of the usual zero, experiments proved.

Larvae of Mosquitoes

Destroyed by Oxygen

Oxygen, usually essential to life, is fatal to mosquitoes in the wiggler stage. It has been found at Cornell University, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The discovery introduces a bottom-growing plant, called chara, which gives off minute bubbles of oxygen. In pools of water where chara was growing, no mosquito larvae were found, while others that contained no chara were prolific breeding places.

It was thought that the oxygen produced by the plant might be responsible, and to prove it, mosquito larvae were placed in jars filled with water. Oxygen bubbles were admitted to some of the containers, while the others were left undisturbed. In a few days the larvae from the jars without oxygen emerged as mosquitoes, but all in the other jars had died.

EXCESS ACID SICKENS—GET RID OF IT!

Sour stomach, indigestion, gas, usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated. Food sours in the stomach.

Correct excess acid with an alkali. The best form of alkali is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It works instantly. The stomach becomes sweet. Your heartburn, gas, headache, biliousness or indigestion has vanished!

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the pleasant way—the efficient way to relieve the effects of over-acidity.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia has been standard with doctors for over 50 years. 25c and 50c bottles at drug-gists.

A Better Idea

Winston Churchill, at a farewell dinner in New York, was talking about Hollywood.

"A moral enough place," he said, "though they do marry a lot out there—and divorce a lot, of course. 'A film critic said to me one day: 'I've got a good idea. I'm going to publish a Hollywood 'Who's Who.'"

"A better idea," I said, "would be a Hollywood 'Who's Whose.'"

That's Different!

The old-fashioned farmer was hard to convince. "No," declared he. "I'll have no such contraption in my house. Planners are bad things."

"Oh, but father," protested his daughter, "this is an upright piano."

—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Dad's Motive Power

Teacher was going to give an object lesson. "Tommy," she began. "Why does your father put up storm windows every fall?"

"Well," said Tommy, "Mother keeps at him until he finally gives in."—Christian Register.

Trick of the Trade

Robinson—Was it successful—engaging that ex-burglar as your chauffeur?

Smithers—Rather! I've never found a finger mark on the car yet. —London Humorist.

Callers
"How about Dintler? Is he popular?"
"Yes; everybody goes to see him the first of the month."

WHEN YOU CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry-on in comfort.

Bayer Aspirin was meant for just such times, because it insures your comfort. Freedom from pains that nag at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block a threatening headache while it's still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you have caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Bayer Aspirin when you travel. Have some at home. It will often "save the day."

From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains, Bayer Aspirin is ready with its quick relief—and it always works. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Any nagging, needless pain.

Get the genuine tablets, stamped with the Bayer cross. Why experiment with imitations costing a few cents less? The saving is too little. There is too much at stake. But there is economy in the purchase of genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

Positive Evidence

Lawyer—Was your car under complete control at the time?

Defendant—Yes, my wife was sitting in the rear seat.

Bad Stomach Cause of Bad Skin

You can't expect to have a good clear skin if your stomach is weak and disordered.

Undigested food sends poisons through the body, pimples appear—skin grows sallow and loses color. But these troubles will end quickly and skin clear up if you will start today taking Tanale.

Tanale is made from herbs, barks and roots. A tablespoonful before each meal stimulates the digestion naturally so that you can digest what you eat. And when your stomach is in good shape again watch how quickly skin begins to clear up. At your druggist's. Money back if it doesn't help you.

No more COLIC pains... give Castoria

ACRY in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. When there's need of gentle regulation. Every child loves the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is usually all that's needed to right the irregularities of older, growing children. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. It's prescribed by doctors!
